The records of centenarians prove that m ny do well as total abstainers, but that many also do well who take alcohol in some form or other, and, for the feeble type of constitution, which is never des-tined to such length of days, a certain moderate amount of alcohol stimulant is, perhaps, one of the greatest blessings they

Or centenarians, who certainly were not abstainers, the following instances may be mentioned: Cardinal de Satia, Archbishop of Seville, died in his 110th year in 1785, with every faculty except his hearing unimpaired. He imputed his green old age to a sober, studious life, regular exercise and a good conscience, as well as a pint of the best sherry at each meal, except in very cold weather, when he allowed himself a third more. Macklin, the actor, who lived 107 years, two months and ten days, up to forty lived, his biographer states, very irregularly, drank hard, est up late at night and took violent exercise. Subsequent to that period he proceeded by rule. He drank tea, porter, wine, punch and ate fish, flesh, fowl, etc, till he was seventy, but he never drank to excess. His usual quantity was seven or eight glasses of wine. He was always moderate at his meals, never abstemious. At seventy he gave up tea because it disagreed with him, and his drink with his meals for the last forty years of his life was white wine and water made very sweet.
